Inhibition of rotavirus cell infection by a ribosomal component and by a cytosolic virus-nucleic acid binding protein. A 100,000 X g extract (containing ribosomes, adenosine-5'-triphosphate, a heat labile factor, urea-insoluble proteins, and DNase) from Chinese hamster ovary cells were able to inhibit cell infection by the simian rotavirus SA11. The extract prevented viral RNA from polymerizing into polyacrylamide-gel electrophoretograms even when added at a post-transcriptional step in the virus replication cycle. In contrast, the extract did not have any inhibitory effect on viral RNA polymerization by a pre-transcriptional step. The extract also inhibited the adsorption of the virus to cells. It was able to prevent viral RNA from accumulating in polysomes, as observed in the viral infection. By polyacrylamide gel electrophoresis under denaturing conditions, rotavirus RNA from infected cells treated with extract bound to itself more weakly than the viral RNA derived from the extract-treated cells. These studies show that the extract or some constituent of it was able to interact with rotavirus RNA and inhibit viral cell infection. Introduction ===== Genital herpes is associated with adverse pregnancy outcomes, especially in women. The exact mechanism of how herpes increases the rate of congenital malformations remains unknown. The aim of this study was to investigate the impact of genital herpes on pregnancy outcomes and the link with intrauterine growth retardation (IUGR). Methods ===== A cross-sectional study of 170 women, screened at the Department of Obstetrics, Vojvodina University Clinical Hospital, Novi Sad, Srgije Memorial Hospital, Novi Sad, and Belgrade Hospital for Women, Belgrade, which had genital herpes from 1 week before through 1 week after delivery. The samples were collected from January 2001 to December 2006. Results ===== There was a higher rate of preeclampsia (19.4%), preterm labor (11.7%), premature rupture of membranes (11.7%), IUGR (12.4%), and cesarean section (CS) (14
